Summary of Legislation

The bill requires the Parks and Wildlife Commission to apply the best available wildlife and ecological science to adopt rules concerning wildlife management. The bill also amends the legislative declaration for Colorado Parks and Wildlife (CPW) to clarify that the state may authorize hunting, trapping, and fishing based on best available science to benefit wildlife, whole ecosystem health, and all Coloradans.

Background

The Parks and Wildlife Commission is a citizen board, appointed by the Governor, which creates regulations and policies for Colorado's state parks and wildlife programs. Members of the commission include sportspersons, agricultural producers, recreationalists, and at-large members. At least four of the 11 members must be from west of the Continental Divide. The commission provides general guidance to CPW, which is responsible for the implementation of any policies set by the commission.

State Revenue and Expenditures

CPW, in the Department of Natural Resources, may see a minimal increase in workload to incorporate best available science into rulemaking procedures. If CPW makes a change to hunting, trapping, or fishing license regulations as a result of the bill's requirements, then a change in revenue would occur. The exact amount of revenue change depends on changes in future license availability and has not been estimated in this analysis.

Effective Date

The bill takes effect 90 days following adjournment of the General Assembly sine die, assuming no referendum petition is filed.
