Summary of Legislation

Current law requires persons restrained by a civil protection order to submit to a fingerprint-based criminal history record check prior to courts considering modifications to orders. Additionally, the court may require restrained parties to provide certified copies of any criminal dispositions not reflected in state or federal records. The bill provides that only the court is authorized to receive any documentation obtained through this process, and prohibits courts from providing received documentation to protected parties without the consent of restrained parties.

State Expenditures

The Judicial Department must update policies and procedures to ensure compliance with the bill's requirements. This minimally increases workload in the department for FY 2025-26 only.

Effective Date

The bill takes effect upon signature of the Governor, or upon becoming law without his signature.
