

Improvements invest in public fun

Cobb County continues to improve its playing fields and more through the Special Purpose Local Option Sales Tax program.

Residents can expect to witness more construction at Cobb parks and recreation facilities during the coming year, with ongoing renovations to improve the function and look of 50 locations throughout the county.

"The 2011 SPLOST program gives the parks department the ability to do much needed renovation," Parks, Recreation and Cultural Affairs Director Eddie Canon said. "This will give our user groups better quality facilities and we're very pleased with the way the projects are moving forward."

A few of the sites include Harrison Tennis Center, Central Aquatic Center, Wild Horse Creek Park, The Art Place, Al Bishop Park, East Cobb Park, Silver Comet Trailhead at Floyd Road, Mable House Arts Center, South Cobb Recreation Center and Sewell Park.

Parks, Recreation and Cultural Affairs Department Senior Project Manager Tom Bills said architects and engineers have been busy since January designing many of the improvements.

"There is a lot that is happening," he said. "We're working as fast as we can."

While 12 percent are completed, 61 percent of the planned projects are in the design and engineering phase, according to the August SPLOST progress report. Six percent remain in the construction phase and 21 percent have not started.

The Mountain View Aquatic Center's air quality improvements and architectural upgrades were completed last year. The changes were funded through the 2011 Special Purpose Local Option Sales Tax.

For instance, replacement of the Harrison Tennis Center started in August, while most of the new scoreboards for various parks have already been installed. Paving at Al Bishop Park was completed in August as preliminary design for other improvements are underway for the location.

Other projects include repairs and interior improvements at Ward Recreation Center to prevent water leaks. The replacement of cross-tie retaining walls at many parks is ongoing, while new concession buildings are planned for Oregon, Fullers and Sewell parks.

Bills said the work is all centered on replacing, repairing or improving existing facilities and equipment.

"There's nothing new in anything we're talking about," he said.

County officials have also coordinated with various volunteer sports associations to reduce disruption of their programs and games.

"We're trying to minimize interruptions," Bills said.

The volunteer groups are deeply involved with the projects, officials said. They helped develop the lists of improvements in their individual parks and are even looking at the plans before they are built.

"We're getting very positive feedback from the public," Canon said of the renovations. "We believe this will improve everyone's experiences at the parks."

An expansion was recently added to the basketball courts at Hurt Road Park, removing the existing cross tie and slate dust borders. The park also received replacement fencing for its tennis courts.

Participate in transportation plan

Cobb County has launched the 2040 Comprehensive Transportation Plan Update. This update will assist the county and its cities in designing, planning and funding transportation investments through the year 2040.

Public participation is a significant and important part of this process. The same careful planning that made Cobb County robust today is now needed for the future. Every citizen's opinion counts as the public identifies countywide goals, priorities, policies, programs, strategies and projects to maintain Cobb's quality of life while keeping Cobb in motion.

Get involved. Share your thoughts about where we're going. To participate, log onto www.cobbinmotion.com.
