Description: This course introduces students to the tools and principles of international diplomacy. How can leaders use military threats to pressure foreign adversaries? When must they instead offer incentives and inducements to elicit cooperation? How can countries demonstrate that they will abide by the promises they make at the bargaining table? Why do negotiation strategies appear to succeed in some cases but fail in others?

We address these questions in two steps. First, we develop a series of analytic tools that help us understand strategic behavior in international disputes. This includes a conceptual framework for identifying relevant actors, understanding the range of available actions that leaders can take, and evaluating the international and domestic political pressures that leaders face.

In the second half of the course, our emphasis shifts from bilateral and international crises to multilateral or civil conflicts. We will consider the emergence of insurgencies and rebel movements, the behavior and interests of terrorist organizations, the formation of allied coalitions, and the influence of external actors on domestic peace agreements.

Finally, throughout the course, we explore a series of important historical crises with the goal of understanding whether the events in each crisis match our theoretic expectations. By the end of the term, students will be expected to:

- understand the role that uncertainty and commitment play in diplomatic disputes;
- identify how leaders use promises and threats to elicit cooperation or concessions;
- understand the strategic decision-making of non-state violent actors;
- offer policy advice regarding ongoing international disputes.

Prerequisites: This is an advanced undergraduate course. Although no previous upper-division coursework in international relations is necessary, the reading load is not light and the content is moderately technical. Finally, I expect students to participate during class as we move back and forth between analytic stylization and historical narratives. Be prepared to ask and answer questions and to discuss the reading in detail!

Rules and Requirements: The course requirements consist of quizzes and participation (10%), a midterm exam (25%, May 10th), a final exam (25%, June 14th), and a research paper (40%, final copy due June 7th). The exams include identification, short-answer, and essay questions. You must earn a passing grade on both the midterm and the final to pass the overall course. I use the following grading scale: “A-” = [90-93.3̄), “A” = [93.3̄-96.6̄), “A+” = [96.6̄-100], with other letter grades following equivalent intervals.

Quizzes: At the beginning of each class, students will answer a series of short questions on material from the previous lecture and/or the assigned readings. I will drop your lowest quiz score when calculating your overall grade.

Research Paper: Select one of the following contemporary crisis issues. Your assignment is to write a 12-15 page paper in which you examine the crisis using the theories from the class. Who are the relevant actors? What are their interests? What actions could they take to permanently resolve the crisis or disagreement? Is peaceful resolution likely? Why or why not? The complete guidelines, prompt, and recommended readings for the research paper are available on TritonEd. If you would like to analyze an alternative crisis, contact me for approval and a list of suggested readings.

- The Israeli-Palestinian conflict.
- Disputes regarding the North Korean or Iranian nuclear weapons program.
- Ongoing violence in Syria and Iraq.

You must submit an electronic copy of your first draft (6 pages) for feedback on Sunday, May 20th. Final versions of the paper are due June 7th to TurnItIn.com via TritonEd. Papers must be typed, 1.5-spaced, with 1-inch margins. I am happy to read additional drafts of your paper throughout the term. You will also have opportunities to share your work with and receive feedback from your peers.

Academic Dishonesty: All work must be completed by the individual to whom it is assigned. Students are not permitted to use unauthorized assistance of any kind. Any student who is caught cheating or plagiarizing will receive a failing grade for the course and will be reported to the Academic Integrity Office for administrative sanction.

Late Assignments and Missed Exams: Make-up assignments are only offered under valid and documented circumstances. If you know you will miss an exam for a legitimate reason, notify me at least a week in advance. Email is perfectly acceptable. If you cannot contact me in advance, you must do so as soon as possible. I will work with you to resolve reasonable problems, but it is your responsibility to arrange with me to take a makeup exam. All make-up work must be submitted by June 17th.

Attendance: Class attendance is not mandatory but will probably improve your performance on assignments. Information we cover in class either may not be in the readings or may not be in easily interpretable form. Some material is also easier to learn when you hear someone explain it and/or when you have an opportunity to discuss it with others.

Grades and Appeals: You will be graded solely on your academic performance. This includes clarity of thought, knowledge of the material, composition, spelling, and grammar. Students can appeal grades that they believe are incorrect. Appeals will consist of one typed page that identifies the problem and presents a reasoned argument that revision is appropriate. Appeals must be submitted within one week of the return of an assignment.

Disability: Students who will request accommodations should register with the Office for Students with Disabilities (University Center 202; 858.534.4382) and provide me with documentation outlining appropriate accommodations. I am happy to meet with you during my office hours to discuss your needs.
