This course is the first part of a two-part series that offers an intensive examination of major strands of Chinese and Japanese political thought from antiquity to the mid-twentieth century. (It is not necessary to take both parts of the sequence.) You will have the opportunity to read original writings of Chinese and Japanese philosophers (in translation). We will be comparing and contrasting the views of Chinese and Japanese philosophers with perspectives of other leading ancient and modern Western and non-Western thinkers. Special emphasis will be placed on how the views of Chinese and Japanese thinkers responded to changing conditions within and outside their own societies, and on how the ideas themselves changed as they moved from one historical and social context to another.

The course will be conducted in a combination lecture-discussion format. This means that all students are expected to have completed the assigned readings before attending the class sessions during which they will be discussed (with the exception of the first class meeting). This way, class discussions will be stimulating and conducive to an interactive and effective learning process. The significance of active and productive participation in class discussions by every student in the class is reflected in the formula according to which final grades will be assigned (see page 3 of this syllabus). Since there is no edited, pre-selected English-language collection of specifically political philosophy in China or Japan, we will be gleaning the political implications of the various strands of thought that we study. The midterm paper (5-7 pages) will be due via e-mail on Tuesday, February 16th no later than 5:15 p.m. The take-home final examination distributed in advance will be due in by e-mail on Thursday, March 17, 2016 between 7:00 p.m. and 10:00 p.m.

Dr. Hoston holds regular office hours to give students an opportunity to discuss questions concerning the course and other matters with respect to their career plans with the professor. In addition, the Teaching Assistant also holds regular office hours to discuss the course material, assignments, and exams. Many times such discussions outside the classroom can be even more valuable than regular class time for the student.

Finally, in order to offer additional opportunities to ask and answer questions and to discuss course material outside the classroom, an online discussion group has been established. On the first day of class, you will be given your first assignment: to subscribe to the online discussion group by sending an e-mail to poli113b-2016-subscribe@yahoogroups.com. You are encouraged to supplement opportunities to participate in class discussions by participating actively in the on-line group. This is an ideal opportunity for you to participate if you happen to be shy speaking in front of a group. The group site will also be used by the instructors and students to organize review sessions and study groups, exchange ideas on and suggestions about the midterm and final papers, and generally to facilitate the learning process.

Students are not expected to have a background in Chinese or Japanese history, although such knowledge would be helpful. Students are expected to have some familiarity with political thought and social science in general.
