

Partnership in Action

It takes teamwork to ensure that this landscape thrives. Land Trust of Santa Cruz, Save the Redwoods League, Sempervirens Fund, and Peninsula Open Space Trust share responsibility for these lands. It's a special partnership of private, donor-funded organizations working together to save and heal this beautiful forest. Creek and forest restoration, invasive plant management, wildfire prevention and restoration projects, and wildlife habitat enhancement are all underway and will continue for years to come.

Conservation by Design

This trail network was meticulously designed to avoid critical habitat. We are confident we can protect these lands while also connecting people to this amazing place.

Together, we are hard at work restoring crucial habitat and building the forests of tomorrow. We welcome you to this special place and hope you are inspired to take part in the future of conservation.

A Spectacular Landscape

San Vicente Redwoods is both a spectacular natural landscape and a visionary conservation project. Ten years ago, four local land trusts came together to purchase the largest unprotected property in the area, conserving it forever. This property is nearly 9,000 acres and stretches from the ridgeline almost to the Pacific Ocean. It is home to rare and endangered species, contains two critical coastal watersheds, and connects landscapes that support the movement of wildlife throughout the region.

Wildlife Connectivity

Large mammals like mountain lions require substantial territories for hunting and breeding. That's why it's important to connect smaller habitats and keep large habitats intact. San Vicente Redwoods is not only big, it also connects more than 27,000 acres of protected lands, making it an important habitat and passageway through the entire Santa Cruz Mountain range. The Land Trust of Santa Cruz County has been purchasing lands in the wildlife corridor for decades, creating permanent connections for wildlife.
